1. Hohanlychen (Kreis Templin) received a Soviet AA unit on or about 15 September 1947. Since that time the unit has been holding night exercises. Its gun or rocket launchers are located on the grounds of a former German hospital. No searchlights are employed and firing is directed, not at a low target, but at a rocket target moving rapidly at a high altitude. This target, as well as the projectiles used against it, emits a conspicuously long and continuous orange fire trail. The projectiles also develop a heavy smoke.
2. "Early fall" is the only date supplied for the arrival of motorized troops with a staff and divisional headquarters at Bunzlau (B42). These troops, stationed in villages around Bunzlau, also possess a T-34 unit. A number of the soldiers, while haggling over marketing with the local population, have referred to the difference in prices obtaining between Bunzlau and Potsdam.
